

Paul goes to Rome

When Paul returned to Jerusalem from his third missionary journey, he was falsely arrested and spent two years in a Palestinian jail. Paul appealed to Caesar and was sent to Rome to stand trial. This was his right as a Roman citizen. The journey to Rome was long and filled with much danger.

Did this bother Paul in the least? No, despite the circumstances Paul continued to minister to those around him. It is also during this time that Paul likely wrote several of the letters we now know as books in the New Testament. Our children will see that despite the loss of his freedom, God allowed Paul to continue to minister to the churches of his day and to churches of the 21st century. Our children will be encouraged to boldly stand up for Jesus.
